Resistance occurs when germs defeat the drugs designed to kill them.

Any antibiotic use in people, animals, or crops can lead to resistance.

Resistant germs can spread between people, animals, and the environment through contact and the food that you eat.