OMA June webinar - Sins of omission: Addressing the legacy of the Oregon Historical Society as a pioneer memorial association

June 23, 2021, 11 am - 12:30 pm

The roots of the Oregon Historical Society (OHS) stretch deeper than most cultural heritage institutions in the Pacific Northwest. OHS’ legacy of acquisition and description is skewed and narrowed by its origins as a pioneer memorial association. It is incumbent on OHS leadership and staff to confront and address the various expressions of this legacy. Staff members from several departments will discuss ways they incorporate radical empathy in the work they do to address the issue.

Presenters:

- Laura Cray, Digital Services Librarian at OHS
- Eliza E. Canty-Jones, Editor of the Oregon Historical Quarterly and Director of Community Engagement at OHS
- Nicole Yasuhara, Deputy Museum Director at OHS
- Erin Brasell, Managing Editor of the Oregon Historical Quarterly and Managing Editor and Co-founder of Dear Oregon, OHS’s blog
- Dana Miller is Collection Management Librarian at OHS

Registration is open.

- OMA members: $15
- Non-members: $25

Civic Season hopes to form a new "more perfect union"

Made By Us, the engine connecting history museums and sites with Millennials and Gen Z, and Civics Unplugged, are kicking off the inaugural "Civic Season" this summer, and invite state and local history organizations to be a part of it. The tension between our nation’s promises and practices calls us all to dig deeper into our traditions, our history, and our role in forming “a more perfect union” going forward. Today, amid a groundswell of interest about America’s future, how might we imagine a new kind of tradition that goes beyond hot dogs and fireworks?

The Civic Season, held between Juneteenth and the Fourth of July, mobilizes us all to engage with our past, take action in the present, and shape the future, through activations in our neighborhoods, cities, towns and social spaces.

Can historians be traumatized by history?

Whether collecting items from a recent mass shooting or reading first-hand accounts of brutal military conflict, public historians can be more affected than they know by their research subjects. James Robins writes in an article in The New Republic, "The phenomenon of the historian traumatized by history remains unstudied and is not widely known. Yet anyone who has documented depravity knows the symptoms."

Inclusion and accessibility
Cultivating more inclusive attitudes among the public

A new primer for museums

Audiences and Inclusion: A Primer for Cultivating More Inclusive Attitudes Among the Public uses new research to examine how museums can effectively employ one of our superpowers—the ability to spark curiosity—to cultivate more inclusive attitudes. Published by Wilkening Consulting and the American Alliance of Museums, the 10-step primer offers a roadmap for museums to use radical curiosity and courageous empathy to crack open museum-goers’ worldviews and effect critical societal change while maintaining and broadening our audiences.

Northwest Digital Heritage offers access and support for digitization

The Oregon Heritage Commission, State Library of Oregon, and Washington State Library have partnered to launch Northwest Digital Heritage (NWDH), an online platform for Oregon and Washington based libraries, museums, and cultural heritage organizations to digitize and make accessible cultural heritage materials.

NWDH features two primary digital efforts. One is a central point of access for online users looking to discover primary source materials and other resources related to Oregon and Washington history. This offers easy access to a variety of collections which currently includes nearly 80,000 records from over 60 institutions. The second is to support organizations in digitizing their collections following best practices and make them accessible through the online service hub.

NWDH provides cultural institutions the following services:

- Metadata “harvesting.” Records are copied from their home systems, standardized, and then transferred to DPLA.
- Digital collection hosting. Offers smaller institutions an online platform to host their digitized items including historical documents, photographs, oral-history recordings, and more.
- Training and support. Service hub staff, composed of teams at both state libraries and the Oregon Heritage Commission, train cultural heritage organizations to digitize collections, edit and preserve digital files, and catalog material to archival standards.

Museum accessibility survey results
The results are in from a museum accessibility survey promoted by the Western Museum Association. The survey revealed that there is strong support for implementing accessibility but there is much work to be done. Most of the institutions represented in this survey have yet to fully deal with the basics. Every museum needs an accessibility leader, someone with passion, to lead an accessibility advisory group that includes persons from the disability communities. The accessibility leader and group must be empowered to develop polices and procedures, provide training to employees and volunteers, involve the local disability communities as strong partners, and structure effective communication (web and direct) with visitors.

Making historic properties accessible

Historically, most buildings and landscapes were not designed to be readily accessible for people with disabilities. In recent years, however, emphasis has been placed on preserving historically significant properties, and on making these properties-and the activities within them-more accessible to people with disabilities. With the passage of the Americans with Disabilities Act in 1990, access to properties open to the public is now a civil right.

The National Park Service's Preservation Brief offers guidelines and suggestions, including a list of readily achievable accessibility solutions, including these for restrooms:

- Installing grab bars in toilet stalls.
- Rearranging toilet partitions to increase maneuvering space.
- Insulating lavatory pipes under sinks to prevent burns.
- Installing a higher toilet seat.
- Installing a full-length bathroom mirror.
- Repositioning the paper towel dispenser.
